Subject: Lanny Davis: Ukraine's sanctions against Firtash were widely publicized – but his response went ignored, Kyiv Post, July 20, 2021

Hello,

We wanted to flag for your attention the below op-ed published today by Lanny Davis in the Kyiv Post on the baseless sanctions issued against Dmitry Firtash and the lack of attention given to his fact-filled response. Please feel free to call Lanny Davis to correct or clarify any prior stories you have written about Mr. Firtash that were based on non-factual assertions (or based on prior false or misleading published articles that pop up on Google). Lanny Davis can be reached at 202-744-2792 or LDavis@dggpllc.com; Eleanor McManus: 202-460-1451 or emcmanus@tridentdmg.com; Alex Lange at 202-480-4309 or ALange@dggpllc.com.

Lanny Davis: Ukraine's sanctions against Firtash were widely publicized – but his response went ignored

Editor's Note: The following is a response by Lanny Davis, a U.S. lawyer representing Ukrainian oligarch Dmytro Firtash, to the coverage in the Kyiv Post and other media of Ukraine imposing sanctions on Firtash.

At some point in the near future, it appears Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky will visit with U.S. President Joe Biden. This is an extremely important visit since U.S.-Ukrainian close relations are now more important than ever. As one of the two attorneys in the U.S. representing Dmytro Firtash, I am writing on behalf of someone who has always stood for a strong and independent Ukraine, as he wrote in the Kyiv Post on May 21, 2014. I know that President Zelensky and President Biden share this vision of Ukraine.

I also know that both Presidents Biden and Zelensky appreciate the importance of allowing for due process of law based on facts before anyone is “convicted” of wrongdoing, whether that “conviction” happens by a government minister at a press conference or in the headlines.

U.S. satirist Jonathan Swift, author of “Gulliver’s Travels,” famously once said: “A lie can travel halfway around the world while the truth is still putting on its shoes.” And that was said more than two centuries before the invention of the Internet, where lies can circulate the globe many times in less than a second, and search engines like Google keep them alive forever.

That is exactly what happened to Mr. Firtash last month. On June 18, a minister from Ukraine’s National Security and Defense Council made false statements at a press conference justifying sanctions that Mr. Firtash sold titanium products to “Russian military enterprises.” That statement was and is 100% and provably false. No specifics or facts were offered to support these accusations because there are none. To the contrary.

Not surprisingly, these falsehoods went around the globe on the Internet almost instantly, leading to false headlines, such as:

- Reuters: “Ukraine sanctions tycoon Firtash for business links to Russian defence firms”
- Radio Free Europe: “Ukraine Hits Oligarch Firtash, Dozens Of Others With Sanctions”
- Atlantic Council: “Ukraine’s Russia sanctions target Putin’s inner circle”
- Mother Jones: “Rudy Giuliani’s Ukrainian Friends Keep Getting Sanctioned”

Put aside the utterly false additional innuendo that Mr. Firtash is or ever was in “Putin’s inner circle” or is or ever was a “friend” of Rudy Giuliani. (Mr. Firtash never met or talked to Mr. Giuliani and had nothing whatsoever to do with Giuliani and Trump’s effort to dirty up President Biden and his son, which President Zelensky also courageously refused to take part in despite pressure from Trump). Here are the indisputable facts surrounding the false sanctions accusations, which we sent out throughout U.S. and European media to rebut the false charges by certain officials of the Ukrainian government:

- Firtash has never sold any titanium products, whether finished or raw materials, to any Russian “military enterprise.”
- Ukraine’s own state-owned titanium raw materials mining company, called United Mining Chemical Company (UMCC), is currently supplying titanium raw materials to the Russian company VSMPO-AVISMA, the world’s largest titanium producer. This was not disclosed by the Ukrainian security official at the June 18 press conference.
- Firtash’s other titanium businesses, such as his plant located in the Crimea, produce titanium dioxide, a white pigment in powder form that is used to dye paints, paper, and clothing, and has no military application whatsoever.

Surprise! Despite my efforts to circulate these facts to media throughout the U.S. and Europe, you will not easily find them published anywhere. And to date, the Ukrainian government has not rebutted a single one of them.

There are so many other instances of utterly false assertions about Mr. Firtash repeated in headlines and perceived as true as a result of their repetition. But a falsehood repeated 100,000 or one million times is not made true as a result of repetition.

To offer three examples of endlessly repeated falsehoods in the media about Mr. Firtash: Mr. Firtash has never been charged by U.S. prosecutors with paying any bribe in India; he has never shared profits or done business with Russian organized crime figures or organizations; and has never – not once – been indicted much less convicted in Ukraine for corruption. Yet Google the words “corruption” and “Firtash” and you will see proof of Jonathan Swift’s expression about the speed of lies vs. the truth.

Maybe Ukraine’s government can start by admitting they got their facts wrong on the Firtash sanctions and withdraw them. And then I hope the same government minister who held a press conference announcing the false accusations will hold another press conference and admit he got it wrong. Is that a hopeless hope?
